

ARTIST STATEMENT

I have learned lots of thing this quarter. One of the things I learned this quarter was The Rule of Thirds. The Rule of Thirds is a rule that most artist use to create their art work, there are three parts to this rule, one part of the rule is that your art work must touch three corners of your paper mean your art work must touch at least three angle of your paper. The second part is the negative and positive spaces. When you are drawing you must decide what your positive and negative spaces are going to be, Negative space is usually space around your drawing and in between them and positive is usually your actually drawing. The third part of the rule is the point of interest. The point of interest is where the person looking at your art eyes goes immediately.

The one art I used for my Portfolio is the inspirational drawing. I picked this drawing because it means a lot to me and it's also one of my favorite artwork and also it applies to the rule of third. This picture applies to the rule of third because the picture is touching three part of the paper and that's one part of the rule of thirds. The second reason is my positive space are Red, Green, and Yellow and my negative spaces are the black. I pick those colors because black is usually the negative space and I use Red, Green, and Yellow because those were the color of the picture. The last rule is the point of interest and the point of interest in my drawing is the first in the middle of the picture. The reason that is the point of interest is because when every I look at the picture my eyes goes right there to that fist and also it pops out between the positive space. That my artist statement, hope you enjoy reading it.
